VINIFICATION

This wine is the latest addition to the Bocchino range; it is produced not for commercial reasons (in fact, the number of bottles is very small compared to the other wines) but purely for professional enthusiasm and inventive curiosity.

The name ‘Re d’Autunno’ [Autumn King] was chosen because the grapes arrive in the cellar in late autumn, when all the other wines have already completed their alcoholic fermentation.

They are passito Moscato grapes, left to dry on the vines so that they can absorb the precious nutritional substances until the last minute, as they slowly dry out and the sugars and aromas are concentrated to 300g – 350g / l. The fermentation occurs spontaneously and slowly in small oak barrels.

The wine is produced in a limited number of bottles and not every year, because the process of drying on the vine requires a mild, breezy climate with little rain; characteristics that autumn unfortunately rarely grants us.
